

Richard Bradley

Few can match the volunteer record that Richard Bradley of Chicago has compiled. The former vice president of the Midwest Section and a member of the USTA Multicultural Participation and Community Development committees, Bradley served as president of the American Tennis Association and helped create the Greater Chicago Community Tennis Association. The Richard Bradley Tennis Center in his hometown of Rushville, Ind., is named in his honor.

Boris Miksic

Boris Miksic, 54, of North Oaks, Minn., has played tennis for 45 years and in 39 countries. "I always carry my racquet with me when I travel," says Miksic, a native of Croatia who has twice won Bud Collins' annual tournament in Florida. Miksic's passion for the game extends beyond the lines. His company, Cortec Corp., has been the title sponsor for the Northern Section's annual pro circuit event—the $50,000 USTA Women's Tournament—since its inception in 2001.

George Yuhas

George Yuhas of Tucson, Ariz., received the USTA Life Umpire Award and the USTA Grassroots Umpire Award. The Life Umpire Award recognizes 20 or more years of service to the game. "In my opinion, George is one of the most dedicated people in our profession and most deserving of these two awards," says fellow umpire Edmond Murphy. "George has made tremendous contributions to the sport as a coach, as an umpire, as a motivator and as a teacher."
